Missing Newborn Remains Located

After A Nearly Two Day Search

Halifax, Nova Scotia, 24.05.2026, 20:36 Time

USPA NEWS - A search operation for a missing newborn baby in Halifax has concluded with the discovery of infant human remains.

New information redirected the search to Prospect Road and the surrounding area today. Remains were discovered at approximately 3:20 p.m. in a wooded area off Old Coach Road. The Nova Scotia Medical Examiner Service will be conducting an autopsy to determine the cause and manner of death.

A 23-year-old woman remains hospitalized in critical condition. Authorities believe the woman suffered a medical emergency and do not suspect foul play.

On Saturday, authorities took four people known to the woman into custody for questioning, and two have since been released while charges have been laid against the other two.

A court appearance is set for Monday in Halifax Provincial Court for Sukhpreet Singh, a 23-year-old relative of the woman, and his wife, 26-year-old Ramandeep Kaur, on charges of concealing the body of a child, obstruction, and Indignity to a dead body. The investigation remains ongoing. Condolences have been extended by police to the infant's loved ones.

Quote from Chief Don MacLean:
“Moments like this are among the most difficult for first responders. We feel the weight of this loss and are grieving with the community while working tirelessly to find answers. My sincere thanks go out to the officers and ground search and rescue teams for their dedication throughout this challenging search. I urge people to take care of themselves and reach out for support if they need it.”
